BIO – IAN MACDUFF

Ian is Teaching Fellow, Centre for ICT Law at Auckland Law School. He was, until June 2016, Associate Professor of Law and Director of the Dispute Resolution Initiative at Singapore Management University and, formerly, Director of the Centre for Dispute Resolution at Victoria University of Wellington. He has been a practising mediator for over 35 years, in commercial, environmental, policy, intercultural, family, online mediation and other fields. He is a member of the Independent Standards Commission of the International Mediation); and a member of the IMI's Task Force on Intercultural Mediation accreditation, a member of the Global Organising Committee of the Global Pound Conference series, and a Fellow of the National Centre for Technology and Dispute Resolution [http://odr.info/fellows/] and founding member of the International Council on Online Dispute Resolution.

He is co-editor of Ethnic Conflict and Secessionism in South and South East Asia (Sage, 2003); contributing author of Dispute Resolution in New Zealand (OUP 1999), and of Guidelines for Family Mediation (Butterworths, 1995) and contributing author to An Asian Perspective on Mediation. He is editor of Essays on Mediation: Dealing with Disputes in the 21st Century, (Kluwer 2016). He is also a contributor to the Kluwer Mediation blog (http://mediationblog.kluwerarbitration.com/author/ian-macduff/?doing_wp_cron=1591739971.7557680606842041015625).

Ian has undertaken training with Dr Peter Adler, Dr Christopher Moore and with the Harvard Program on Negotiation. He has provided mediation and conflict resolution training for (amongst others) the World Health Organisation in Sri Lanka and Geneva), NGOs in Italy, government Ministries in New Zealand and Australia; and mediation agencies in Singapore.